Voice credits for talking avatars

Board creators offer a short voice session to visitors. Visitors who want more time can continue using their own credits.

Who does what

Visitor	Opens a board link and gets one sponsored voice session of up to 3 minutes per board every 24 hours, while the board has sponsored time available. To keep talking, the visitor signs in and uses or buys credits.
Board creator	Gets one monthly allowance shared across all their boards. They can cap how much sponsored time each board offers and buy more credits for the shared pool. Extra boards draw from the same allowance.
LivingWiki admin	Edmond and Jim can override session limits, board caps, and creator allowances without paying. Admin minutes still appear in usage reports.

When the free session ends

The visitor can choose Continue with my credits or Continue in text. Restarting immediately uses the paid path. Each paid session can last up to 10 minutes, with another restart available as long as the visitor has credits. Another sponsored session is available after 24 hours if the board still has time to offer.

EXAMPLE / A VISITOR TALKS TO FLAMINGO

Flamingo's board has 2 sponsored minutes left. The visitor uses those two minutes, then chooses to continue for four more. The creator spends 2 credits from their shared pool, and the visitor spends 4 credits from their own balance. The app asks before switching who pays.

More › Voice Usage shows personal credits and credits for your boards. One credit equals one minute, measured by the second. Included creator credits reset monthly, and purchased credits carry over.

Launch decisions Set the creator's monthly allowance, the default sponsored cap per board, and the prices for credit packs. The 3- and 10-minute session limits are proposed defaults.
